Caitlin channels her energy and passion toward achieving client goals in all stages of corporate investigations, government investigations and enforcement actions, and complex litigation.

As a partner in Dorsey's Government Solutions and Investigations Group, Caitlin utilizes strategic, creative thinking to represent clients in corporate investigations, government enforcement actions, fraud and securities litigation, and other complex commercial disputes. She believes that understanding each client's business objectives is crucial to devising the ideal investigation or litigation strategy, and enjoys helping clients pursue their best possible outcomes.

Caitlin maintains an extensive investigations practice, with significant experience conducting defensible investigations of Foreign Corrupt Practice Act ("FCPA"), False Claims Act ("FCA"), securities fraud, embezzlement, and insider trading issues. Among other federal and state agencies, Caitlin has experience navigating investigations and responding to subpoenas and civil investigative demands involving the U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ"), U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"), U.S. Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS"), and the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS").

In addition, Caitlin regularly conducts investigations involving high-level executive and/or director misconduct, including high-stakes allegations related to #MeToo discrimination, harassment, and retaliation allegations. Caitlin similarly enjoys conducting workplace cultural reviews designed to proactively identify opportunities for clients to mitigate risk and improve the workplace environment. She also advises clients on compliance programs (with a special expertise in anti-corruption and FCPA compliance), including developing effective and practical policies, conducting employee trainings, and assisting in corporate due diligence reviews.

In her litigation practice, Caitlin focuses primarily on white collar, securities, and fraud
