

Introduction and Welcome

January 14, 2026 – Dorsey Law & Policy Notebook

by Troy M. Keller

I love our firm's footprint. Dorsey & Whitney's legal professionals sit in 22 offices across the U.S. and internationally, where they apply global talent at a local level. These offices are in financial centers like New York, London, Hong Kong and Chicago as well as in high growth cities in the Rocky Mountains, like

Salt Lake City (where I sit). We are anchored in the Midwest, which has led to some of our firm's strengths in sectors like health care, banking, chemicals and ag.

With this many legal eyes and ears watching law and policy developments in diverse business communities, we thought it only made sense to share insights we are seeing. Our focus will be on developments that we are close to and that are useful for our clients. We won't purport to cover everything, but we will try to bring a practical, useful viewpoint.

As part of that, we will do some curating by pulling in excerpts from our firm's longer updates, particularly ones that address the frontiers of law and policy. We will also drop in short notes and call-outs. We hope this will bring a particular focus that, again, is useful to our clients, many of whom are just like us, competing globally while operating locally.
