Jack uses the skills he learned on Capitol Hill to advocate for his clients in the courtroom.

Jack is a Partner in Dorsey's Securities and Financial Services Litigation Group and Co-Chair of the firm's Cooperative Law Practice. In his practice, Jack represents clients in fiduciary duty disputes, regulatory enforcement actions, corporate governance disputes, securities litigation, shareholder derivative actions, and commercial disputes of all shapes and sizes. A significant portion of Jack's work focuses on serving clients in the agriculture, transportation, energy, and financial services industries. Through this work, Jack manages all aspects of litigation, from the pleadings stage to trial, and has extensive experience with civil motion practice and complex discovery.

Jack has substantial experience counseling clients on governance matters, antitrust issues, and regulatory compliance, with a particular emphasis on advising cooperatives in the food and agriculture industry and carriers and shippers in the transportation industry.

In his counseling practice, Jack draws upon his experience in each of the three branches of government. Before joining Dorsey, Jack worked on Capitol Hill where he advised members of Congress in both the Senate and House on agriculture, transportation, and trade issues, among others. Jack also worked in the executive branch at the United States Department of Agriculture, where he served on the staff of the Under Secretary for Rural Development. Immediately prior to starting his practice at Dorsey, Jack served as a judicial law clerk in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota.

Jack maintains an active pro bono practice and has represented tribal members in disputes pertaining to the taxation of land on tribal reservations and low-income clients before state housing court. Jack is also a member of Dorsey's Lower Sioux Indian Child Welfare Team, which represents the interests of native children in child protection cases in Minnesota state courts.
