Jeremy has a proven track record of consistently guiding clients to success for over 15 years.

Jeremy focuses his practice on representing corporate trust institutions in various agency and indenture trustee capacities in connection with domestic and cross-border debt capital markets transactions. He has experience representing clients in connection with secured and unsecured project financings. Jeremy has also worked with secured and unsecured creditors and disbursing agents in various defaulted debt, restructuring, and bankruptcy matters.

Prior to practicing law, Jeremy worked for eight years in the corporate trust department of a large banking corporation in New York, serving in numerous managerial and employment capacities. His unique skill set allows him to leverage this past management and work experience with his legal training to provide clients with a broad understanding of the issues facing corporate trust institutions.
