Monica's commitment to strategic problem-solving and advocacy helps her clients navigate complex legal disputes successfully.

As an associate in Dorsey's Commercial Litigation practice group, Monica represents clients in a variety of complex commercial disputes involving business torts, breaches of contracts, and fraud claims in state and federal courts. Her clients include individuals, small business, and large corporations spanning a wide range of industries, such as infrastructure, agribusiness, food and beverage, healthcare and life sciences, and banking and financial institutions. Monica has extensive experience in all stages of litigation, from pre-litigation strategy and discovery through mediation, trial, and appeals. Her expertise informs the strategies she offers her clients to resolve matters effectively.

In addition to commercial disputes, Monica represents clients in employment law matters involving racial and gender discrimination claims, wage claims, and disputes involving noncompetition and nonsolicitation agreements.
