A key aspect of identifying litigation risks is uncovering where a company deviated from its established practices, best practices, internal guidelines, or stated values. This process often reveals critical issues, making it advisable for companies to engage counsel to conduct an internal review or third-party investigation. In this episode, SharkCast host Kent Schmidt interviews Dorsey Partner Margot Laporte on internal investigations. These investigations aim to determine what went wrong, why it happened, and whether any illegal conduct occurred that may need to be reported to authorities.
